A Warning Against Fakirs.

A Warning Against Fakirs.

To the Editor of the Dispatch:

The writer of this, together with two other gontlemen, attended, as they thought, the first programme of Herculaneum at the Fair-Grounds on Saturday evening last. They purchased tickets, and were told nothing of their inability to give the performance. Their money was received even after it had been announced in the enclosure by the proprietor that they were not able to give the performance, and that any one would be entitled to receive tickets at the gate for Monday night. This they complied with. The writer saw a gentleman apply for the return of his money, as he said he lived away from the city, and would on Monday night be 100 miles away. His request was most rudely refused. Now, what will strangers think of our city if such people are allowed to so fake them?

Will Hardly Have a Celebration.

The committee appointed at the last meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Council to suggest the best method of observing Labor-Day next September met last evening at the residence of the chairman, Mr. John T. Chappell, No. 2112 east Clay street and decided not to have any celebration whatever in this city on that day, but to take a trip in a body to Virginia Beach. Of course, the decision of the committee is not final, since their action will only be put in the form of a recommendation at the next meeting of the Trades Council, but it is generally conceded that whatever the committee sees fit to susgest will be approved by the council. The labor men of Norfolk are preparing for a large demonstration at Virginia Beach on Labor-Day, and have tendered a most cordial invitation to the labor men of this city, which will in all probability be accepted. Will Hardly Have a Celebration.

Cars on Broad Street. Cars on Broad Street.

The cars of the Richmond Traction Company are running regular trips on Broad street. They are receiving a liberal share of the street-car patronage of the city. The company has been highly elated over the success of its opering. Very few delays have occurred, and these have only been of temporary character. On Sunday afternoon one of the cars got off the track at the point where the temporary tracks connect with the permanent, but this only detained a few cars a short while. By Thursday, the management say, the Reservoir and Cwood extensions of the Traction Comp. will be in operation.

"Herculaneum" Scenery Blown

Down. The colossal scenery which had been erected at Lee Pleasure Park for the spectacular production, "The Destruction of Herculaneum," was blown down during the storm which passed over the city yesterday afternoon, and therefore the performance could not be given last night. The scenery was not at all damaged, but the work of reconstructing it necessitates the delay.
